Letter from the AWARE Executive Director

As we begin winding down COVID emergency measures, AWARE is reflecting on how the pandemic altered survivor needs and services. Emergency shelter continues to be a priority. Alternative options, such as shelter off-site through hotels is also an option. Bypassing shelter altogether was just as important. During the pandemic, we helped survivors with rental assistance, moving expenses, or barriers to housing, such as delinquent utilities to facilitate access to new homes.

Access to court systems and relief, such as Personal Protection Orders became extremely important during the pandemic. Our legal advocacy team were steadfast in their response during times when the courthouse was closed to the public. Our team showed up every day and provided access to survivors by text, e-mail, telephone, or by meeting off-site.

Counseling services were essential. Counselors reported seeing former clients return and an increase in new clients. Through the use of telehealth services, crisis counseling remained steadily available. Telehealth reduced barriers overall for survivors seeking support by reducing transportation and childcare needs.

In June 2022, we safely increased occupancy to 100%. But what we learned while operating with reduced occupancy, is the important of privacy. The overall shelter environment was calmer, less stressful and more conducive to healing.

As we look ahead, we will continue to prioritize survivor access to resources that meaningfully address their needs.

Sincerely,

Angelita Velasco Gunn
Executive Director
